“Too many PhD-holders? Job prospects with a doctorate”

“Doktoren im Überfluss” (“Plenty of Doctorate Holders”) was one of the headlines in ‘Das Handelsblatt’ in 2019. Indeed, the number of doctorate holders has grown steadily in Germany in the last decades. In 1975 the number of successfully finished doctorates was 11,418 – 20 years later the number has doubled (22,387 in 1995). Another 21 years later it reached an all-time peak in 2016 (29,303). Since that year the number shrunk to 26,220 in 2020. According to the OECD Germany has a relatively high share of doctorate holders: 2.0 percent of the people aged under 35 are PhD-holders, in all OECD countries this share is lower (1.1 percent). But in contrast to other countries most of them leave the academic sector. But what are the career outlooks? What are the working conditions for those who leave and those who stay in academia? And what chances do people have when leaving the academic sector relatively late? This talk will pick up on these questions and will deal with job prospects for people with a doctoral degree.

“Career Paths Inside and Outside Academia after the PhD”

The transition from completing a PhD to a career inside or outside academia can be challenging: How do my skills translate to a job in the business, public or non-profit sectors? Where can I find inspiration and what's behind certain job titles? If I want to stay in academia, what options do I have, how do I get a professorship (will I get one?) and what are important points I need to know when following the academic career path? This talk aims to give an overview of the career paths inside and outside academia, gives advice and inspiration and also aims to explain some of the particularities of the German academic system and its careers.
