

Bachelor of Arts (B.A.): Before the registration of the Bachelor's thesis students have to provide evidence of proficiency in two languages beside German (attested by a school diploma or a language certificate).

Master of Education (M.Ed.) with the career goal in higher secondary school education (Gymnasium): Before registering the Master's thesis students have to provide evidence of subject-related knowledge of Latin by passing a written exam (90 min.; a translation of a text of 80 words and a response to a question of interpretation) in a reading course offered by the Institute of History. The reading course is part of the module ges113 (Ancient History), which takes place in the winter semester, and the module ges123 (Medieval History), which takes place in the summer semester.

Important notice: In order to pass the written exam at least an intermediate knowledge of Latin is required. Students are advised to acquire the necessary language skills as early as possible. One possibility is to attend the modules pb033 and pb034 (Latin for Theologians I & II), which are offered by the Institute of Theology and Religious Education. The participation in these modules can be recognised as study achievements in the area of specialisation of the Master's degree programme.

Master of Arts „European History“ (M.A.): The language requirements depend on the historical period you focus on. If you want to specialize in ancient or medieval times, you must demonstrate the Latinum and one other foreign language beside German; when you put the emphasis on contemporary or modern history, two modern languages beside German are necessary.

The latest information on the language requirements for history degree programmes you will find in the subject specific attachments ("fachspezifische Anlagen") to the examination regulations:
